To help children, parents and teachers cope with bullying, the online platform Live Without Bullying was created. On this platform, people can ask and answer questions, exchange thoughts and stories and receive support.

At the same time, different educational activities are offered to help people understand the reasons behind bullying, while also teaching them how to deal with these situations.

The project shows great results so far: more than 10,000 people have visited the platform, more than 1,000 users have already registered and 120 educators across Greece have taken online classes on the platform about bullying.

“John (12) visited the platform in 2016 to confess to a counsellor the bullying he was subjected to from a number of classmates. Because he liked dancing and joined a ballet school, they called him “gay” and "girl". He tried to speak to adults, parents and teachers, but did not receive the necessary support. Gradually, the situation deteriorated and his school performance dropped. After several meetings, the counsellor helped John to believe in himself, to not feel guilty about his preferences, respect his natural talent in dancing and make dreams for the future. John learnt to express his opinion without fear.”
