"When I became a carer, I had little experience.

Tender4Life helped me to build my skill set and enabled me to give the person I was caring for the best quality of life possible.

The training provided by Tender4Life has given the person I care for, and their family, peace of mind because they can completely rely on me to do my best - knowing that I have the knowledge and support to be able to carry out my job to the best of my ability."

Tender4Life aims to promote the professional development of low skilled adults working in elderly care settings, by providing them with a complimentary and alternative curriculum based on a humanistic approach.

The curriculum focusses on topics such as dignity, autonomy, compassionate care and quality of life.

As a result of Tender4Life's training curricula, participants have shown a greater interest and commitment to their roles - together with an increased understanding of the importance and value of adopting a humanistic approach when caring for older persons.
